Director Index

The Director Index provides a complete videography for any director with more than one video credit. The listings for the director names follow an alphabetical sort by last name (although the names appear in a first name-last name format). The videographies are listed chronologically, from most recent film to directorial debut. If a director helmed more than one film in the same year, these movies are listed alphabetically within the year. Use this index in conjunction with the Cast (immediately preceding this index), Writer, and Cinematographer indexes (immediately following) to see where some of today's hottest directors got their starts.

Writer Index

The Writer Index provides a videography for any writer with more than one video credit. The listings for the writer names follow an alphabetical sort by last name (although the names appear in a first name-last name format). The videographies are listed chronologically, from most recent film to their first. If a writer wrote more than one film in the same year, these movies are listed alphabetically within the year. Used in conjunction with the Cast index, this index will let you find actors and actresses who wrote themselves juicy parts (with varying degrees of success). Directors also tend to show up here, either before their directorial ambitions surfaced, or after they'd gained enough clout to get one of their scripts to the screen.

Cinematographer Index

The Cinematographer Index provides a videography for any cinematographer, or Director of Photography, as they are also known, with a video credit. The listings for the cinematographer names follow an alphabetical sort by last name (although the names appear in a first name last name format). The videographies are listed chronologically, from oldest film to the most recent. If a cinematographer lensed more than one film in the same year, these movies are listed alphabetically within the year. Many of today’s top directors started as cinematographers, the people responsible for the “look” of a movie.

The Composer Index provides a videography for any composer, arranger, lyricist, or band that has provided an original music score for more than one film now on video. The listings for the composer names follow an alphabetical sort by last name (although the names appear in a first name, last name format). Video Sources

The Video Sources section provides full contact information, including address, phone, fax and toll-free numbers, as well as web site address and e-mail when available, for mail order and retail resources for videos reviewed in this book. They are listed alphabetically. Some of the videos have no currently known distributor, but copies may still be available. Others are On Moratorium, meaning their distributor, or more likely, their producer, has pulled them out of circulation for a certain amount of time. These videos may still be available from local or mail sources because they were distributed at one time. Many video stores provide an ordering service. If your local video store doesn't have a title you want, you can ask them to order it for you, or you can find someone here who will. To find additional web-based and specialty distributors, please check our Web Site Guide.

Web Site Guide

The Internet is an important resource for movie information, appreciation, and (especially) obsession. For your web surfing enjoyment, we have compiled a comprehensive list of many of the top entertainment websites that will expand your movie knowledge. If you're looking for information on how to make your own film, there are sites for that, too. The guide is divided into seven categories: cult movie resources; film magazines; film studios; filmmaker resources; film reviews; general entertainment; and video outlets. The sites are listed alphabetically within each category, and each site includes name and URL address information. The general information websites briefly describe what you can expect to find. Just as you can spend hours flipping through Videohound, you can spend hours cruising the web with the sites listed below since a majority of these homepages can link you to other sites on the web.
